THE BYGONE ERA

ORNAMENTAL STATEMENTS

The Nizam and the princes would wear ceremonial regalia to attend official function. In addition to the sarpech, a turra of gold wire, a distinguished ornament worn only by members of the royal household used to be worn. Princes often wore a smaller sarpech, the turra as well as necklaces, armbands and belts. Only high-ranking officials would wear the turban ornaments. The crown jewels constituted exquisite pieces and large gemstones as head ornaments for the head-dress an important component of dressing of the princes. Some of the exquisite pieces and large gemstones were used as head ornaments. The sarpech signified power and hierarchy.

Sahebzada Salamat Jah in Royal Regalia

The neck would be adorned as the occasion warranted, with an assortment of necklaces; a kanthi, a padak marvareed and finally, a har murassa (a necklace). The achkan (coat) would have jewelled buttons, a pocket watch in addition to the baglus (belt) on the waist. Important officials and members of the royal household would wear jewelled baglus on formal occasions, ornamented with large gemstones attached to the woven gold belts.

The Nizams enjoyed heavenly treasures and worldly comforts and pleasures. His Exalted Highness (H.E.H) Nawab Sir Mir Osman Ali Khan, the last Nizam, is remembered for being the staunchest ally of the British in India. The Nizam made a gift of diamond jewels, including a tiara and necklace, to Queen Elizabeth on the occasion of her marriage and it is still worn by the Queen and is known as the Nizam of Hyderabad necklace.

The enduring rich heritage of the Nizams is captured in our beautiful NIZAMI COLLECTION. The oversized, pulsating gemstones, throbbing with a life of their own. Pear-shaped, moon-faced gems stacked in glistening, shimmery layers of diamonds, emerald greens, creamy pearly whites this collection has it all. Every element used in this collection is carefully chosen and designed to uphold the magnificence of the royals. This collections consists of chokers, chandelier earrings, waist belt and jumkas.

TESTIMONIALS

Ms. Bala Latha, IAS.

Kalasha fine jewels was recommended to me by one of my friends. Was here to explore and check out their collections. I was very impressed with their designs. The unusual pairing of gemstones and different colour combinations was out of the box.

Not only the design but the finish and the quality were also excellent. Hence, bought this beautiful choker of uncut diamonds, pearls and tourmalines which bagged me a lot of compliments.
